bloomingdale's SCREEN TESTS directed by JENNIFER VENDITTI

The same way you adapt the season's trends based on your personal style, an actress takes her own unique approach to each script. "I'm attracted to people who believe in themselves, are unique and aren't afraid to be who they are," says casting director/documentary filmmaker Jennifer Venditti. "Those who go against the grain a little bit." Jennifer's debut documentary "Billy The Kid" was a hit at Sundance and her resume includes casting countless high fashion photo shoots with real people—making her the ideal collaborator for this project.

We worked with Jennifer to gather a group of up-and-coming actresses and had them choose pieces from the Fall 2009 collections that appealed to their personal styles. Giving them a choice of two scripts, we filmed their monologues, showing just how different and special each actress is. "This is my dream job," says Jennifer. "Casting, filming, getting to play with different characters and going deeper within the actresses and what they feel about the process and the experience." How does she recognize talent within the many interesting, driven people she meets? "That's like asking someone what the color green looks like to them, or asking them what is beauty—it's an instinct."

aleksandra orbeck

A great actor is endlessly versatile, hence, Aleksandra looks as lovely in this sexy Marc by Marc Jacobs dress (above) as she does dressed in downtown chic Elizabeth & James (opposite). She traded in her lush homeland for the gritty city that is NYC, and it's been quite the emotional rollercoaster. "You see people pushing each other on the subway and they're furious. You see people cry, they're devastated. But when they're happy, there's nothing to describe the happiness they're feeling."

paz de la huerta

In Jim Jarmusch's latest film "The Limits of Control," Paz is credited as "Nude," so needless to say, these body-hugging leggings (above) are a perfect showcase for her famous curves. "My mood inspires the way I dress," says the NYC native. "Sometimes I want to hide and sometimes I don't." Even in destroyed jeans (opposite), her inner glamour comes through. Her favorite thing about acting? "The uncertainty. I'm totally adventurous and I live in the moment."

amy seimetz

Amy's as comfortable in front of the camera as she is behind it—making her a hot commodity in the movie biz. Her style is just as flexible. One day she's rocking a leather jacket and flannel (opposite), the next, it's superglam sequins (above). "I got into independent films in when I was 16," she says. "As soon as I saw that offbeat way to tell a story, I knew that's what I wanted to do." She recently produced "Medicine for Melancholy" and directed her first feature "A City on a Hill."

on the right: THEORY

emily meade

The reluctant girl-next-door, Emily is cute and sweet on the outside, with an independent streak that shines through. This sexy leopard print and leggings look (above) and the rock chick look (opposite) show off her wild side. She just finished Wes Craven's thriller "25/8" and is now filming "Twelve" with Joel Schumacher. "When I was little, I got such a high off making people laugh," she says. "That turned into a love of telling stories and affecting people."

"I love to dress up like a specific character in my mind," says Eleanore. "And it doesn't always have to be super girly." During our shoot, she showed off two different sides (above & opposite). "I'm one of those people who's not necessarily a drifter, but I like to explore different things." Check her out in her new project she's working on with her boyfriend called "The Pleasure of Being Robbed," where she plays a character loosely based on herself.

cristin milioti

Sure, this New Jersey native had a role on "The Sopranos," and can speak the accent with the best of them, but she's got so much more. She plays a reluctant Syrian-Jewish newlywed in "Stunning" at Lincoln Center, and a supermarket femme fatale in "Year of the Carnivore," her first lead in a feature film. "Not to use an actor-y term, but you have to go to 'dark places' and be willing to show people that you've been through things." She shows off her playful side with the layered leggings look (above) and this poufy party dress (opposite).

katherine waterston

A statuesque beauty—Katherine’s long legs and delicate features don’t need a lot of dressing up. This super comfortable jumpsuit (above) and classic jean (left) are totally open to interpretation. “I’m growing into more and more of a uniform person during the day—wearing neutrals, greys, blacks,” says Katherine. “I pair them with my odd vintage finds and hat collection.” See her in Ang Lee’s “Taking Woodstock” and in “The Factory” with John Cusack.

nicole beharie

It's been a busy year for this recent Juilliard grad. She recently acted in her first leading role in "American Violet," she played in a show at the Public Theatre and taped a pilot for CBS. "I'm just sort of playing around, seeing what's out there and enjoying every minute of it," she said. It's her professional attitude and easygoing spirit that make bright pops of color (above & opposite) so suitable to her. "A lot of what it takes to play a character really comes from inside—it comes from yourself."
