

Books

Sing You Home

by Jodi Picoult | ★★★★

REVIEWED BY LISA KAY GREISSINGER

NOVEL
Picoult, who's created a cottage industry out of family melodrama and medical controversies, has crafted another winner in this story about music therapist Zoe Baxter and her decade-long struggle to become a mother. After a round of IVF ends in the devastating birth of a stillborn son, Zoe is still willing to try again, but she is blindsided when her husband, Max, bails out on their marriage. Divorced, Zoe unexpectedly falls in love with, and marries, a woman. But when the couple seek to use leftover frozen embryos to start their family, Max, now a born-again Christian, seeks advice from his pastor, who has vowed to battle the "homosexual agenda." Before you can say "Heather has two mommies," the former spouses find themselves at odds in a courtroom filled with lawyerly theatrics and witness-stand revelations. As both sides battle it out in court, Picoult cleverly examines the modern world of reproductive science, how best to nurture a child and what, exactly, being a family means.

"Can someone stop loving you because you aren't who they want you to be?"

GREAT READS NEW IN FICTION

THE MATCHMAKER OF KENMARIE
by Frank Delaney
World War II-era Ireland is the lush setting for Delaney's tale of intrigue and romance.

THE SHERLOCKIAN
by Graham Moore
A modern-day Sherlock Holmes devotee channels the iconic detective as he investigates a grisly murder.

A RED HERRING WITHOUT MUSTARD
by Alan Bradley
Bradley's third book about tween sleuth Flavia de Luce will make readers forget Nancy Drew.