

Is a Personal Stylist for you?

You are busy. You can barely find time to wash your dishes let alone update your wardrobe every season. It's easy to see why fashion gets the brush-off to the many other demands of the day, but how you present yourself is both important for yourself and for the people around you. Every day we make impressions on people, and it will come as no surprise that the judgments made about us are done in mere moments. It's not that people are committing the cardinal sin of judging a book by its cover; it's that we don't have the time or mental energy to learn everything about every person we come across. Finding the right look puts you at an advantage because your confidence shows through, and you never know when or where you will find your next amazing opportunity.

Marissa has been styling people of every age and body type for 12 solid years. Her experience started with a love of shopping which led to fashion design school and eventually her own label and brand. You can trust that she has your best interests at heart. Marissa has the resources to make economical choices for every budget and a history of understanding how her clients want to dress while finding ways to help them to branch out to other styles they may not have originally considered.

She invites you to enter her site and explore the many ways she's helped people understand how to form their best relationships with fashion.
