

Dog Tired

If you swear your dog yawns when you do, science may back up your claim. Researchers from the University of London attempted to find out if dogs would yawn after a human and found that 70% were up to the canine challenge. Dr. Atsushi Senju, a main researcher on the study, tells us that's actually higher than humans who only do it 45-60% of the time for each other. "Our finding adds to the increasing body of data that suggest the amazing capacity of dogs for detecting and responding to human communicative cues," Senju says, adding that it's most likely due to the last 15,000 years through human selection.
