Will Cities, States Lead Way To Solar FITs?

Written by Marsha Johnston

Tuesday, 10 March 2009

In what could be a trend, Gainesville, Florida's municipal utility Gainesville Regional Utilities (GRU) last month adopted the U.S.'s first true feed-in tariff, a la Germany's fixed-rate, long-term payment for solar energy.

As of March 1, GRU customers with new PV systems can get $0.32 per kwh for 20 years. On a recent conference call organized by the Solar Electric Power Association (SEPA), Wilson Rickerson, principal consultant at Rickerson Energy Strategies LLC noted that "FIT ideas here in the US have moved from a head-scratching idea to...still a head-scratching idea, but more acceptance." Probably to avoid looking like Euro-copycats, U.S. legislators often call FITs "renewable energy payments," and Rickerson said 9 states now have FIT legislation under consideration, and 9 more are talking about them as a way to meet RPS goals.

On the federal level, Rep. Jay Inslee (D-WA) has proposed a federal FIT, though it has not been voted on, and state and local authorities may well beat the feds to deciding that FITs provide the best investor security in this period of uncertainty regarding tax equity financing.

good jordon shoes

written by jordon shoes, June 17, 2009

There was a couple jordon shoes who had been married for a long time,and one day, they were walking through the park together, when they saw a young couple sitting on a bench, kissing each othervery passionately. So the wife said to the husband, "Honey,why don't you do that?" And the husband said, "How? I don't even know that lady!"

Hi, We're EnviroWonk

Yeah, OK, we can be the change that we want to see in the world. But unless powerful people in powerful positions want to be that change as well, nothing's going to change.

So now, finally, there's a place where you can go for news and analysis of politics from an environmental perspective.
