

A Good Fit

by

A. Richard Langley

Even though feet are at the bottom a man's frame, they are covered by shoes, a top priority item for women to evaluate him as a potential partner. We figure that a man who wears shoddy or out-of-date shoes can't afford quality shoes, doesn't have good taste in shoes, or doesn't take pride in his appearance. The look and style of a man's shoes attract us as much as his physical and emotional makeup.

Men know that we continually eye their feet to check out the brand and condition of their footwear—and the size of their feet. Thus, a shoe-loving man who wants to impress the ladies finds and buys quality shoes with the confidence and efficiency of Imelda Marcos or Carrie Bradshaw. And we appreciate and are intrigued by a man who expertly picks, buys, and wears stylin' shoes. If he can please us putting them on, he surely can turn us on after he takes them off.

Pleasurably, a shoe-loving man treats the shoe-buying experience as foreplay. When he spots a pair of kickin' shoes, his face glows and his stride quickens like a guy on the prowl. After he coolly checks the shoes' look and price, he tries them to check size and comfort. He wants to be as happy with his new shoes as he is with his special lady.

An attractive man who loves and has great taste in shoes is a perfect romantic fit—as long as he is into you more than shoes.